

Shut-off valve for gear wheel oil heat exchanger

(Porsche Doppelkupplung (PDK) and manual transmission)

To heat up the gear wheel oil in the transmission faster, the shut-off valve for the gear wheel heat exchanger is opened (pressurized) during the engine warm-up phase as soon as the coolant has reached a temperature of 138° F (59° C) and is therefore hotter than the gear oil. The coolant then flowing into the gear oil heat exchanger boosts heating of the gear oil to the setpoint temperature of 194° F (90° C). The friction in the gear wheel set is reduced faster (the viscosity characteristics of the oil improve when the oil temperature increases), shifting comfort is increased and fuel consumption is reduced.

The shut-off valve is closed by means of vacuum as soon as the setpoint gear oil temperature of 194° F (90° C) is reached.

The shut valve is opened (pressurized) again if the gear oil temperature increases beyond the setpoint temperature and beyond the temperature of the coolant; the purpose of this is to cool the gear oil.

Shut-off valve for ATF oil for double-clutch transmission

(Porsche Doppelkupplung (PDK) only)

The ATF heat exchanger is mounted on the Porsche Doppelkupplung (PDK) housing. Its purpose is to heat the ATF faster (and cool it if necessary) or to cool the oil-cooled and oil-lubricated double-clutch transmission.

Map-controlled thermostat

The map-controlled thermostat is an inverter-map-controlled thermostat with a heating element. The electric heating element of the map-controlled thermostat is energized via the DME control unit. The flow of current through the heating element (electric resistor) causes it to heat up, which in turn influences the expansion element in the thermostat and enables it to be opened. Actuation by the DME control unit is performed by means of pulse width modulation between 2.5 and 97.5%, which means that the coolant temperature level can be continuously controlled.

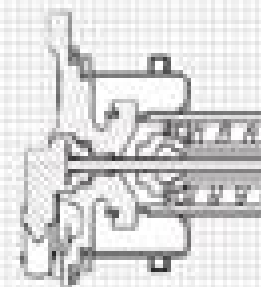

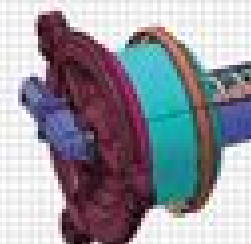

The usual coolant temperature when the engine of the Boxster G is at operating temperature is 221° F (105° C); it is reduced to 185° F (85° C) during sporty driving and in Sport/Sport Plus mode by opening (energizing) the thermostat. This supports a performance-oriented driving style.

The DME control unit can also close the thermostat by switching off the heating current. The coolant temperature must be less than 216° F (102° C) for this to be possible. The map-controlled thermostat starts to open at 216° F (102° C) +/- 36° F (2° C) when de-energized and is fully open at 239° F (115° C).

The coolant temperature is measured by the engine coolant temperature sensor and the radiator outlet coolant temperature sensor and transmitted to the DME control unit.

Diagnosis

Electrical faults, detection of a thermostat that is stuck open or closed and an engine coolant shut-off valve that is stuck closed will result in an entry in the fault memory of the DME control unit. The diagnostic information is guided fault finding must be precisely noted in this case.
