Contemporary Obstetrics and Gynaecology for Developing Countries

Okonofua F, Balogun JA, Odunsi K and Chilaka VN, Eds (2021). Second Edition.

Cham, Springer. ISBN 978-3-030-75384-9 (Hardcover), 978-3-030-75387-0 (Softcover), 978-3-030-75385-6 (eBook).

This is the second edition of the book, and so it should still be viewed as a work in progress. It is important to have specialty reference textbooks from developing countries, with particular attention to the practices and limitations in these parts of the world, where large populations reside, with less than adequate healthcare funding and facilities. Some shortcomings highlighted here hopefully are focus points for future development. Most of the comments apply to several chapters, so the respective chapters are not listed, unless in instances where specific reference is necessary and specific chapters are involved.

The principle of the book is an excellent one, as it should serve as a repository of valuable information on the experiences and limitations of the practice of obstetrics and gynecology in developing countries. Such a reference text for conditions and care in developing countries is also of value to specialists practicing in developed settings. Apart from when such specialists go to work in developing countries, migration and international travel now mean that women from developing countries are often in developed countries and may present to specialists in developed countries, who may not be fully familiar with the variants of the conditions presenting to them.

The structure of chapters is excellent, with each chapter starting with a section on 'Learning Objectives', which sets out what the chapter is about and where relevant, emphasis on levels of preventative measures or initiatives, which are of vital value in settings with limited resources.

Contributors to the book have come mainly from sub-Saharan Africa, with international contribution from the UK, USA, Canada, Australia, and the Middle East. The sub-Saharan contingent of contributors is, however, from institutions in Nigeria and South Africa. This geographic limitation would not have been an issue had it not reflected frequently in the clinical practice experience cited by the author from these institutions. Considering that the title of the book implies that it is aimed at 'developing countries', drawing contributors and reflecting clinical experience from a very small number of developing countries can only be regarded as limited representation of experience and practice in developing countries.

The range of topics is very wide, including chapters on conventional obstetrics and gynecology and chapters related to molecular biology of cancer, palliative care, leadership, health management, human rights, and professional associations. While all of these may be valuable to all trainees and clinicians, they may be needed at different times and depths. Putting these wide-ranging topics together in one book makes the book's focus rather unclear. The question will be whether one large volume is better than smaller but more focused volumes. In other words, the book may be attempting to serve more than one group of users. Only the users can fully answer that question.

The depth to which the chapters go is also variable. Some chapters are very basic, while some go to the level of detail that would be considered adequate for a reference textbook. This may be a reflection of the sheer scope that the book has adopted, and the range of topics covered, that is, its wide scope has resulted in low detail in
