Accounting Profession Major Issues Progress And Concerns:

The Accounting Profession Donald H. Chapin, Robert W. Gramling, 1996-12 Contains the individual recommendations made by the major study groups affecting the accounting profession from 1972-95 a list of experts on the subject of accounting copies of written comments received from the AICPA FASB the SEC on a draft of this report The Accounting Profession: Appendixes to Major issues, progress and concerns United States. General Accounting Office, 1996 The Accounting Profession Donald H. Chapin, Robert W. Gramling, 1996-12 Concerns the status of recommendations made to the accounting profession over the past two decades by major study groups Identifies 1 recommendations made from 1972-95 to improve accounting auditing standards the performance of independent audits under the federal securities laws the actions taken on those recommendations 2 any unresolved issues to determine their impact on the performance of independent audits effective accounting auditing standards setting efforts to expand the scope of business reporting audit services The Accounting Profession United States. General Accounting Office, 1996 The Accounting Profession United States. General Accounting Office, 1996 Public confidence in the fairness of financial reporting is critical to the effective functioning of the securities markets Federal securities laws require public companies to disclose information that accurately describes the financial condition of a company These laws also require that financial statements filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission SEC by public companies be audited by independent public accountants During the past 20 years costly well publicized and unexpected business failures such as the savings and loan crisis and the resulting government bailouts have raised questions about what the public expects from an independent audit of public companies and how well the audit function meets those expectations More recently the globalization of business the increasing complexities of business transactions and advances in information technology have challenged the relevance and usefulness of traditional financial reporting and the auditor's role in serving the public interest These issues along with major litigation involving independent auditors prompted many studies of financial reporting and auditing during the past two decades resulting in hundreds of recommendations to the accounting profession This report 1 identifies recommendations made from 1972 through 1995 and actions taken to strengthen accounting and auditing standards and the performance of independent audits of publicly owned companies required by federal securities laws and 2 identifies unresolved issues and determines their impact on the performance of independent auditors the setting of effective accounting and auditing standards and the scope of business reporting and audit services GAO found that although the accounting profession has made changes to improve financial reporting and auditing of public companies several major issues remain unresolved These issues include auditor independence auditor responsibility for detecting fraud and reporting on internal controls public participation in standard setting the timeliness and relevance of accounting standards and maintaining the independence of the Financial Accounting Standards Board The appendices to this report can be found in GAO AIMD 96-98A The Accounting Profession United States. General Accounting Office,1996 Pursuant to a congressional request GAO reviewed recommendations made by major study groups over the past two decades to the accounting profession focusing on 1 actions the profession has taken between 1972 and 1995 to improve accounting and auditing standards and the performance of independent audits under federal securities laws and 2 unresolved issues and their impact on the performance of independent audits setting of accounting and auditing standards and efforts to expand the scope of business reporting and audit services GAO found that 1 although the accounting profession and the Securities and Exchange Commission SEC have been responsive in making changes to improve financial reporting and auditing their actions have not been totally effective in resolving some major issues 2 concerns remain regarding auditor objectivity despite efforts by the accounting profession and SEC to strengthen auditor independence 3 the accounting profession has issued standards and guidance regarding auditors roles and responsibilities to close the gap between public and professional expectations of auditor responsibility especially in regard to detecting and reporting fraud and internal control weaknesses 4 a voluntary peer review program has improved audit quality control processes and the overall quality of audits 5 SEC and the accounting profession have made efforts to increase user participation in setting audit standards and attempts have also been made to improve the quality and timeliness of accounting standards and 6 the accounting profession and SEC are considering recommendations to create a more comprehensive financial reporting model that would include historical and current cost information as well as more timely and forward looking information
