

Module-5 Exam-5 Study Guide/Assignment

(Chapter 13,14,15)

1. Describe negative vs. positive feedback system with examples.

Negative feedback is the most common feedback mechanism. Negative feedback occurs when the result of an action inhibits that action from continuing to occur. Negative feedback brings the body back toward homeostatic range.

An example of negative feedback would be reaching into a hot stove to get a dish. Your hand slips off the hot pad and touches the hot dish in the oven. A signal is sent to your brain, which tells your arm to contract. When your hand stops burning, your arm can relax.

Positive feedback is a process in which the release of a hormone leads to amplification of production of the hormone. This is a cycle where the hormone stimulates release of more hormones that causes a self-perpetuating feedback loop until there is an interruption in the cycle.

An example of a positive feedback mechanism is childbirth. The fetus's head pressing on the cervix triggers nerves that tell the brain to stimulate the pituitary gland, which makes oxytocin. Oxytocin contracts uterus. This positions the fetus closer to the cervix, increasing oxytocin production till birth.

Why TSH level is abnormally low in hyperthyroidism? The thyroid produces an excess amount of thyroid hormones, which prevents the pituitary from producing more TSH. This is related to negative feedback and increased TRH expression.

Why TSH level is abnormally high in hypothyroidism? The thyroid gland does not produce enough thyroid hormones such as T3 and T4. There is also decreased feedback inhibition on anterior pituitary gland and decreased TRH expression.

2. Where ADH is formed? Produced in hypothalamus- posterior pituitary.

What are its actions? To regulate water reabsorption and the retention of fluids. ADH regulates water absorption by the kidneys and balances the amount of water in the blood.

Excessive release of ADH is known as SIADH. Describe pathophysiology, clinical signs and symptoms, diagnosis and treatment of SIADH.

Pathophysiology: Excessive secretion of ADH from posterior pituitary gland
