

Supervised and Unsupervised Learning

Supervised learning is a type of machine learning where the model is trained on a dataset with known labels and the goal is to predict the labels for new, unseen data.

Unsupervised learning is a type of machine learning where the model is trained on a dataset with unknown labels and the goal is to discover the underlying structure of the data.

Examples:

1. Supervised learning: Predicting house prices based on features like size, location, and number of bedrooms.
2. Unsupervised learning: Clustering customers based on their purchasing behavior to identify segments.

Supervised learning is used for tasks where the goal is to predict a specific output (e.g., classification or regression) based on input features. Unsupervised learning is used for tasks where the goal is to discover patterns or structure in the data without any prior knowledge of the desired output.

Supervised learning methods include:

1. Linear regression: A simple model that assumes a linear relationship between the input features and the output.
2. Logistic regression: A model used for binary classification tasks.
3. Decision trees: A model that splits the data into subsets based on feature values and makes predictions based on the resulting partitions.
4. Support vector machines (SVM): A model that finds the optimal decision boundary between different classes.
5. Neural networks: A complex model that consists of multiple layers of nodes, allowing it to learn highly non-linear relationships.

Unsupervised learning methods include:

1. K-means clustering: A method for partitioning data into K clusters.
2. Hierarchical clustering: A method for building a hierarchy of clusters.
3. Principal component analysis (PCA): A technique for reducing the dimensionality of data while preserving as much variance as possible.
4. Association rule learning: A method for discovering interesting relationships between variables in large databases.

5. Outlier detection: A method for identifying data points that deviate significantly from the rest of the dataset.

Figure 10.1: A diagram illustrating supervised and unsupervised learning. Supervised learning involves training a model on labeled data to predict labels for new data. Unsupervised learning involves training a model on unlabeled data to discover hidden patterns or structures.

6. Reinforcement learning: A type of supervised learning where the model learns to make decisions by interacting with an environment and receiving feedback in the form of rewards or penalties.

Figure 10.2: A diagram illustrating reinforcement learning. It shows a circle with a center point. Four arrows point from the center to the circumference, representing different types of learning. The top arrow is labeled 'Supervised Learning' and points to a small box containing 'Classification' and 'Regression'. The bottom arrow is labeled 'Unsupervised Learning' and points to a small box containing 'Clustering' and 'Association Rule Learning'. The left arrow is labeled 'Semi-supervised Learning' and points to a small box containing 'Semi-supervised Classification' and 'Semi-supervised Regression'. The right arrow is labeled 'Reinforcement Learning' and points to a small box containing 'Reinforcement Learning'.

Reinforcement learning is a type of supervised learning where the model learns to make decisions by interacting with an environment and receiving feedback in the form of rewards or penalties. The model's goal is to maximize the total reward it receives over time. Reinforcement learning is often used in applications like game playing, robotics, and recommendation systems.

Supervised Learning: The goal is to predict a specific output (e.g., classification or regression) based on input features. The model is trained on a dataset with known labels and the goal is to predict the labels for new, unseen data.
