SKILL NAME: Pharmacokinetics and Routes of Administration, External Administration of Medication

REVIEW MODULE CHAPTER 46

Description of Skill

Enteral medication administration involves the esophagus, stomach, and small and large intestines. Methods of administration include oral, sublingual, and rectal.

Indications

Oral medications are convenient and are indicated for patients who can ingest and tolerate several forms of medications. Some medications with short half-lives are administered orally as timed-release or sustained-release forms that get absorbed over several hours.

Sublingual and buccal routes are indicated for medications with high first-pass metabolism that need to avoid clearance by the liver. The sublingual and buccal routes also have advantages of rapid absorption, convenience, and low infection incidence.

A rectal route is useful for patients with gastrointestinal motility problems such as dysphagia or ileus that can interfere with delivering the drug in the intestinal tract. The rectal route is also often utilized in patients near the end-of-life undergoing hospice care.

Outcomes/Evaluation

Monitor the client's adherence to and compliance with their medication regimen.
Assess and reassess the client in terms of the achievement of the expected outcomes of the medication over time.
Monitor the client for any side effects, interactions and adverse effects.
Monitor and assess the client for any signs of toxicity.

Measurable improvement in clinical signs and symptoms and/or laboratory values.
No evidence of adverse drug reactions and/or toxicity.
Patient tolerates medication.

Potential Complications

Highly variable absorption due to stability and solubility of the medication, GI pH and emptying time, presence of food in the stomach or intestines, concurrent medications, and forms of medications.
Inactivation can occur by the GI tract during first pass effect.
Patient is not cooperative or unconscious.
Patient is nauseous or is vomiting.
Medications cannot pass through the epithelial cells that line the GI tract.
Some pathway metabolizes two medications.
Patient is malnourished.
Patient has a condition that inhibits blood flow or perfusion.
Patient has kidney or liver dysfunction.

CONSIDERATIONS

Nursing Interventions (pre, intra, post)

Pre: Identify the patient using at least two identifiers, ensure medication safety in respect to the storage of medications, the checking for expiration dates, the dosage for any patient allergies, and checking for any incompatibilities.

Post: Document the name of the patient receiving the controlled substance, the amount of the substance used, the hour the controlled substance was given, the name of the prescriber provider, and the name of the nurse who administered the substance. Document with a witness any time a full dosage is not given, and some of the controlled substance needs to be discarded.
