

Accounting Principles I

Chapter 2

Account: An individual accounting record of increasing and decreasing in a specific asset or liability or equity. An account consists of a title, debit side, and credit side.

T-Account form:

Title of account
Debit (Dr.)	Credit (Cr.)

Benefits of using a T-Account: – It reduces errors and helps determine totals of each side and the account balance.

Account Balance: The side of the T-Account that is greater. Ex. The account shows a debit balance if debits exceed credits.

Double Entry System: Basis of most accounting systems

Summary of Debit and Credit Rules:

Assets	Liabilities	Owner's Capital	Owner's Drawing	Revenues	Expenses
Debit side increase	Credit side increase	Credit side increase	Debit side increase	Credit side increase	Debit side increase
Credit side decrease	Debit side decrease	Debit side decrease	Credit side decrease	Debit side decrease	Credit side decrease

Normal Balance: The increasing side of the account

Recording Process Steps: Analyze transaction, Put the transaction in the Journal, Transfer Journal information into accounts in ledger

Journal: The book of original entry

Journal contribution to recording process:

- It's one place for complete effects of a transaction.
- Provides a chronological record of transactions.
- Prevents and locate errors easily because debit and credits amounts can be easily compared

Journalizing: Entering transaction data in the Journal. A complete Journal entry contains the date, account titles, amounts of Debits and Credits, and a brief explanation of transaction.

Simple Entry: entries that involve only two accounts: one debit and one credit.

Compound Entry: Entry that requires three or more accounts.

Ledger: The entire group of accounts by a company.

Posting: Procedure of transferring Journal entries to ledger accounts
