

Navigating Fullness and Exile in the Low Countries: Constructing Contemporary Paganism In- and Outside of a Secular Frame

JEDIDJA VAN BOVEN

Charles Taylor's book A Secular Age opens with the three axes along which we can orient ourselves in moral and spiritual terms: fullness, exile, and a stabilized middle condition. Most of the time, Taylor argues, the human condition is not marked by either of the extreme ends of this spectrum – neither the moving yet confusing profundity of fullness, nor the melancholic absence of exile are permanent conditions. Instead, we strive to maintain some semblance of balance between these ends that keeps exile at bay and gradually moves towards fullness: “We come to terms with the middle position, often through some stable, even routine order in life, in which we are doing things which have some meaning for us.”¹ Put differently, it is not either fullness or exile, but rather that fragile middle condition that marks humanity's experience and understanding of both ourselves and the world in which we operate. The question remains, then, how different forms of the sacred and the secular fit into this – how is our experience of the middle condition shaped by the fact that the West has become publicly, institutionally secularized? How is that experience different for those who are actively choosing to engage with spirituality and religion in a way that has marked differences from the organized religion that has faded in the West? This article outlines some of the narratives related to matters of identity and self-understanding used by contemporary Pagans that operate in a context generally perceived to be ‘secular’, though the definition of such a term is contentious at best. The case of the Netherlands, on which this article is based, has shown the complexities surrounding the

Manipulation of Literature (Routledge Revivals) Theo Hermans, 2014-08-07 First published in 1985 the essays in this edited collection offer a representative sample of the descriptive and systematic approach to the study of literary translation The book is a reflection of the theoretical thinking and practical research carried out by an international group of scholars who share a common standpoint They argue the need for a rigorous scientific approach the phenomena of translation one of the most significant branches of Comparative Literature and regard it as essential to link the study of particular translated texts with a broader methodological position Considering both broadly theoretical topics and particular cases and traditions this volume will appeal to a wide range of students and scholars across disciplines Buying and Selling Shanti

Graheli, 2019-02-11 Buying and Selling explores the many facets of the business of books across and beyond Europe adopting the viewpoints of printers publishers booksellers and readers Essays by twenty five scholars from a range of disciplines seek to reconstruct the dynamics of the trade through a variety of sources Through the combined investigation of printed output documentary evidence provenance research and epistolary networks this volume trails the evolving relationship between readers and the book trade In the resulting picture of failure and success balanced precariously between debt economies sale strategies and uncertain profit customers stand out as the real winners Early Printed Narrative Literature in Western Europe Bart Besamusca, Elisabeth de Bruijn, Frank Willaert, 2019-11-05 The essays in this volume are concerned with early printed narrative texts in Western Europe The aim of this book is to consider to what extent the shift from hand written to printed books left its mark on narrative literature in a number of vernacular languages Did the advent of printing bring about changes in the corpus of narrative texts when compared with the corpus extant in manuscript copies Did narrative texts that already existed in manuscript form undergo significant modifications when they began to be printed How did this crucial media development affect the nature of these narratives Which strategies did early printers develop to make their texts commercially attractive Which social classes were the target audiences for their editions Around half of the articles focus on developments in the history of early printed narrative texts others discuss publication strategies This book provides an impetus for cross linguistic research It invites scholars from various disciplines to get involved in an international conversation about fifteenth and sixteenth century narrative literature Literary Culture and U.S. Imperialism John Carlos

Rowe, 2000 John Carlos Rowe considered one of the most eminent and progressive critics of American literature has in recent years become instrumental in shaping the path of American studies His latest book examines literary responses to U S imperialism from the late eighteenth century to the 1940s Interpreting texts by Charles Brockden Brown Poe Melville John Rollin Ridge Twain Henry Adams Stephen Crane W E B Du Bois John Neihardt Nick Black Elk and Zora Neale Hurston Rowe argues that U S literature has a long tradition of responding critically or contributing to our imperialist ventures Following in the critical footsteps of Richard Slotkin and Edward Said Literary Culture and U S Imperialism is particularly innovative in taking account of the public and cultural response to imperialism In this sense it could not be more relevant to what is happening in the scholarship and should be vital reading for scholars and students of American literature and culture
