Pladdys began calling in 1982 and called professionally for several years For ten successive weeks I observed Pladdys calling and teaching a weekly Western square dance class at the Wyoming Civic Center in Cincinnati Ohio By observing Western square dance activities and by interviewing square dance participants including square dance organization officers and Jack Pladdys I gained knowledge of the contemporary Western square dance tradition in Cincinnati In this thesis I define Western square dance terminology related to callers activities discuss musical aspects of calling and identify teaching methods used by callers Additionally I develop a list of calling characteristics in their order of relative importance in Cincinnati Ohio Through my research and writing I attempt to begin the process of documenting the traits that distinguish a Western square dance caller as good within a specific community of Western square dancers By documenting the techniques involved in successful calling I hope to enhance the small body of research on contemporary Western square dance practices
