Memories of a Sparrow Henri de la Blanchère, I was born in the acclimation garden of the Bois de Boulogne My mother had made a choice to build her nest of the thatched roof covering the house of a huge but frightful bird called Marabou Carpet under the crossed thatch we lived in the greatest abundance the mash of the foreign birds assembled in this garden provided my father and my tender mother with an inexhaustible mine to feed us and the prudent sparrow woman had chosen the house of Marabou because of the proximity of the water which allowed her to find easily at the edge the worms that we urgently need during our young age especially at the time of growth of our feathers My nesting companions were two brothers and two sisters and our parents waited only a few days to show us the use of our wings Alas this is easier said than done One night the wind rose under the pressure of the storm Carpet in the bottom of our nest under the wings of our parents we trembled with repeated lightning flashes and under the hot gusts that shook the house on its foundations Faint with fear wet with torrents of water coming through the straws and dripping on our nest we pressed against each other without even daring to cry
