General Practice is struggling to recruit and retain high quality trainees. Though there is a national target to increase recruitment to GP by 2020,¹ the attraction of the specialty has fallen relative to hospital practice.² Currently only 15.5% of doctors completing Foundation Training are appointed directly to GP training posts.³

Reasons for this are multifactorial but one postulated influence is students' misperception that General Practice is not a prestigious or financially rewarding career choice.¹ National studies have confirmed this concern. The recent Destination GP survey jointly led by the Royal College of General Practitioners (RCGP) and the Medical Schools Council (MSC) found that only 3% of medical students aspired to General Practice with final students only 'challenged'.²

The Weiss report 'By choice - not by chance' was commissioned by Health Education England to support medical professionals towards careers in Global Health.¹ The report found that the general perception of the sector lies to the variety of academic challenge that they aspire to. The report made suggestions to support institutions with raising the profile of academic general practice and GPs.

- Making academic training opportunities in primary care more accessible
- Ensuring all students have access to scholarly activity and supervision by primary care leads
- Raising the profile of senior academic GP leaders

We believe that correcting this misperception and raising the profile of academic General Practice amongst medical students is vital in order to attract high quality clinicians and potential future educationalists and researchers into General Practice, and we offer some consensus-based and evidence-based suggestions.

Problem	Suggestion	Responsibility
Students are not exposed to academic GPs	Increase exposure by increasing the presence of academic GPs within the institution	Medical Schools
GPs in medical schools tend to teach communication skills	Create opportunities and encourage GPs to teach academic subjects	Medical schools
Lack of intercalation opportunities in academic GP	Look at how we can create these opportunities and advertise them to medical students	Medical schools
GPs tend to view themselves as 'not academic'	Encourage GP teachers to promote the academic side of their role and to apply for honorary status at universities (e.g. as clinical lecturers)	GP teachers
Academic experience is not seen as important in applying for GP training evidenced by the fact there is no space on the application form for academic achievement	Add a section to the application form on academic experience/publications	RCGP
GP trainees are not encouraged to add academic achievements to their portfolio or to celebrate these achievements	Add a specific section for publications/academic activity Reward GP trainees who undertake academic work	RCGP
Lack of flexibility in GP training for academic opportunities	Raise awareness of academic opportunities, work with the training programmes and Health Education England to deliver more of these opportunities	GP training programmes

In response to The Mass report, Leaders of GP teaching at 14 UK Medical Schools responded with a plan to implement the proposed areas for change. We received their responses, analysed those which would help raise the profile of academic General Practice, and then convened an interest group at our Institution, including academic GPs, academic GP trainees, and medical students undertaking a student research component in academic GP.

Figure 1: Suggestions from 14 UK Medical Schools to raise the profile of academic general practice in response to the Wass report

Medical students form opinions on careers based on their experiences during medical school. If the majority of contact they have with GPs occurs through the teaching of non-consulting topics such as communications, then by educating who do not hold senior positions within the university or in practice, where learning is available for residents and consultants, it is unsurprising that they do not perceive General Practice to be an academic career. It is essential that General Practice attracts high quality individuals with the potential to become academics in Primary Care where research and education are of huge importance. The suggestions we offer from a variety of interested parties we hope will go some way to supporting changing the perceptions held by our medical students and increase awareness of academic career opportunities in General Practice.
