

Newton's Law's and Application of Newton's Laws

Different kinds of forces:

Normal force (N) is the force or the component of a force exerted by the surface on an object in contact with.

Normal force is always perpendicular to the surface irrespective of whether the plane is horizontal or inclined.

Frictional force is the force that opposes the motion of an object and acts parallel to the surface the object is in contact with.

Know that a frictional force is proportional to normal force and independent to area of the surface that are in contact with each other

Static friction is the force that opposes the tendency of motion of a stationary object relative to the surface.

Maximum static friction is the force which can overcome static friction and just cause an object to slide.

Kinetic friction is the force that opposes the motion of a moving object relative to the surface.

Gravitational force or weight (F_g or w) is a force with which the earth attract an object towards itself.

Applied forces (push or pull)

Tension (F_T or T) is the force that is transmitted through a rope, string or wire when pulled by forces acting from opposite sides.

Objects exert push (repulsion) or pull (attraction) forces on each other.

A force can be classified as either a contact force or a non-contact force

Objects can exert a force on each other when they are in contact (touching each other) e.g. friction and normal forces

OR

Objects can exert a force on each other when they are not in contact (i.e. are apart from each other) e.g. magnetic, electrostatic and gravitational forces.
