comprehensive guide to the morphology and syntax of educated speech and plain prose in Spain and Latin America at the end of the twentieth century Spanish is the main usually the sole official language of twenty one countries and it is set fair to overtake English by the year 2000 in numbers 2 of native speakers This vast geographical and political diversity ensures that Spanish is a good deal less unified than French German or even English the latter more or less internationally standardized according to either American or British norms Until the 1960s the criteria of internationally correct Spanish were dictated by the Real Academia Espanola but the prestige of this institution has now sunk so low that its most solemn decrees are hardly taken seriously witness the fate of the spelling reforms listed in the Nuevas normas de prosodia y ortografia which were supposed to come into force in all Spanish speaking countries in 1959 and nearly forty years later are still selectively ignored by publishers and literate persons everywhere The fact is that in Spanish correctness is nowadays decided as it is in all living languages by the consensus of native speakers but consensus about linguistic usage is obviously difficult to achieve between more than twenty independent widely scattered and sometimes mutually hostile countries Peninsular Spanish is itself in flux

Acquisition of Spanish Intonation by Native Korean Speakers JyEun Son, 2018 Acquiring native like proficiency in a second language L2 is difficult to achieve after the critical period Lenneberg 1967 Acquisition of L2 intonation and prosody has been assumed to be the last stage of L2 acquisition and is one of the least explored areas of intonation research. Languages differ in their prosody especially in the way they mark prominence. Languages like English and Spanish mark word prominence by pitch accent realized on the stressed syllable of a word, most often a content word. Languages like Korean, which does not have lexical or postlexical stress, mark word prominence by forming the word into one prosodic unit called the Accentual Phrase (AP) or by locating the word at the beginning of an AP. Jun (1993) in Jun's prosodic typology (Jun 2005b, 2014b) the former type belongs to a head prominence language and the latter type belongs to an edge prominence language. In addition to this prosodic difference, Spanish and Korean differ in the division of lexicon. Spanish distinguishes between a content word and a function word, but Korean does not have function words. Instead, all words in Korean are content words consisting of a lexical item plus a case marker or postpositions, which do not form a separate AP but always form an AP together with the preceding lexical item. Given these prosodic and morphological differences between the two languages, the present study is divided into four fundamental components. First, I posit that Korean Accentual Phrase (AP) initial tone segment mapping will be applied to Spanish in that the High tone will be applied when the phrase initial segment is aspirated (ph, th, kh, t, h, tense p, t, k, s, t, or h, or s), otherwise Low tone will be applied. Jun (1993, 1998, 2000, 2005). Secondly, I hypothesize that nuclear and pre-nuclear Pitch Accents in Spanish will be realized differently since Korean does not have this distinction. Thirdly, I posit that Korean learners will tend to produce an AP-like tonal unit over a function word as well as a content word. Lastly, I hypothesize that the boundary tones in Spanish in information-seeking yes/no questions and wh questions, invitation yes/no questions and wh questions will be realized as HH% or LH% due to L1 influence. Twenty-one L2 participants representing three proficiency levels (seven beginners, seven intermediates, and seven advanced learners) recorded themselves reading words, phrases, and sentences in Spanish in as naturally as possible. Native Mexican and Peninsular Spanish speakers (three participants each) also participated as a control group. Praat was used to analyze the intonation, and the pitch contour was labeled following the Spanish ToBI Tones and Break Indices (Beckman et al. 2002, Prieto-Roseano 2010) and Korean ToBI (Jun 2000, 2005) transcription conventions, which are based on the Autosegmental Metrical model of intonational phonology (Pierrehumbert 1980, Beckman, Pierrehumbert 1986, Ladd 1996, 2008) of each language. The results showed that the Korean Accentual Phrase (AP) initial tone segment mapping had a stronger effect on beginner and intermediate groups than advanced learners. Also, L1 Korean speakers had difficulties in marking prominence according to Spanish conventions and had a strong tendency to produce an L-H rising tonal pattern over a word, i.e. the AP tone pattern, regardless of the location of stress. Stress-based pitch accent in Spanish is difficult to acquire for speakers of L1 Korean, which has no word prosody. Korean AP tones, which cue word prominence via edge marking, are negatively transferred in producing a word and pitch accent in Spanish. Also, in Seoul Korean, as each word forms one Accentual Phrase (AP), L2 learners produced AP-like tonal units, especially on monosyllabic function words in Spanish. It is interesting that the majority of the intermediate and advanced Native Korean Speakers NKS produced L% in information seeking wh questions and in invitation wh questions which is not what I had predicted based on previous research This may be due to the English intonation of information seeking wh questions and invitation wh questions which use a falling tone Future studies are needed to confirm these initial findings of the influence of English on L1 Koreans production Additionally according to the results beginners tend to commit more errors and I posit that this is because these types of sentences require conveying of meaning through intonation beyond simple lexical items According to these results the four dimensions of Mennen 2015 s L2 Intonation Learning theory LILt were supported So far no study has been carried out regarding the Acquisition of Spanish intonation by Native Korean Speakers based on the Autosegmental Metrical model of intonational phonology using Spanish ToBI and Korean ToBI transcription conventions This study offers significant contributions to the field of L2 prosody acquisition of native Korean speakers learning Spanish as my analysis is not limited to boundary tone realization but extended to the inventory of structural phonological elements such as Pitch Accents in Spanish and Accentual Phrases in Korean In general L2 learners are not aware of the prosodic characteristics of their second language and tend to apply their native language s prosodic features to their L2

The Combined Spanish Method Alberto De Tornos,2008-10 PREFACE PROFESOR DE TORNOSS Combined Spanish Method first published thirty years ago has won for itself an established position among students of the Spanish language After the test of use and competition for a quarter of a century it still continues to be the most satisfactory book of the kind in the hands of the public Nevertheless the extensive modification of Spanish orthography by the decrees of the Real Academia Espamla enacted some years ago has necessitated further revisions in accordance with these changes The object of the present edition is to preserve the unquestioned advantages possessed by the original work and at the samc time to make it conform entirely to the rulings of the Academy in order to meet the demands of the modern student Since many of those who are to use the method will do so with the view of travel or residence in some of the Spanish American countries special attention has been devoted to a consideration of the American variations from Castilian Spanish in the matter of pronunciation However there has been no departure from the grammatical principles laid down by the Academy The written language is the same everywhere save that the speech and literature of each country have adopted many words of native origin It will be found expedient to acquire first the true Spanish word and afterward to take up the native variant June 1899 IT is an undoubted fact that in teaching not only languages but any other science or art there neither is nor can be any other method than that of uniting theory with practice and the various modes of applying the one to the other the extent of the application and the time at which it should be commenced have produced the great number of methods hitherto published This fact is now universally acknowledged and each new author proclaims himself to be the only one who has put it into execution The most insignificant little phrase book does not fail to announce in its introduction that it combines theory and practice and grammars containing nothing more than confused masses of rules heaped one upon another are entitled Theoretical and Practical It is admitted on all hands that much progress has been made within the last few years in the art of teaching languages and in testimony of this we have only to mention the excellent oral and practical methods of Jacotot Manesca Ollendorff Boulet Robertson and others who have followed in their footsteps all of which are ably treated and have done much good in their way But each one of the grammarians referred to satisfied with his own invention looked with disdain upon that of his predecessor Hence the enmity and the almost unaccountable diversity of opinion which we observe amongst them Had they studied each other with impartiality and endeavored to profit by the experience and even the defects of the several systems their labors would certainly have been attended with still more favorable results and of course more considerable benefit would have accrued thereby to the science in general
