

Chapter 4 Check Your Understanding questions

Check Your Understanding 4.1

- 1 Double entry accounting means that at least two items will be affected by every financial transaction experienced by a business.
- 2 A ledger is a collection of accounts. An account includes all financial events that affect one particular item. A business may have a bank account, a capital account, a wages account etc. An account is therefore a subset of the general ledger.
- 3 An entry in a ledger account should include the date of the transaction, the name of the other account involved (i.e. the cross reference) and the dollar value of the transaction.
- 4 The basic accounting equation is $\text{Assets} = \text{Liabilities} + \text{Owner's equity}$.
As assets are usually shown on the left hand side of a balance sheet, and debit entries are made on the left hand side of a ledger account, the position in a balance sheet reminds us that assets are debit in their nature and usually have debit balances. Liabilities and owner's equity appear on the right hand side of a balance sheet (credit side); they are therefore credit in nature and usually have credit balances in their accounts.

Check Your Understanding 4.2

- 1 Possible responses:
 - a The business borrowed money from the bank
 - b The business bought a computer for cash
 - c The business made a loan repayment
 - d The owner of the business made a capital contribution to the business
- 2 Owner's equity accounts usually have credit balances. As revenue accounts increase owner's equity, they too have credit balances. Expenses are the opposite to revenues and bring about a decrease in owner's equity. As they are opposite to revenue accounts, expenses are increased by debit entries.
- 3 With cost price:

Cost of sales	Debit
Inventory	Credit

This double entry transfers the cost price of the goods sold from the Inventory account (asset) to the Cost of sales account (expense).

With selling price:

Accounts receivable or Cash at Bank	Debit
Sales	Credit
GST Clearing	Credit

The entries at selling price increase one of two asset accounts. If the goods were sold for cash, the Bank account would be debited. If they were sold on credit, Accounts receivable would be debited. The credit entries would then be made to the Sales account, with 10% of this amount also being credited to the GST clearing account.
