Topic	Definition
Market failure	A state where the free market allocation of resources and responsibilities does not achieve the efficient outcome that would be achieved if the market were perfect. This can be due to a variety of reasons, including externalities, public goods, and imperfect information.
Externality	An effect on a third party that is not reflected in the market price of a good or service. Externalities can be positive (beneficial) or negative (harmful).
Public good	A good that is non-excludable and non-rivalrous. Non-excludable means that it is difficult to prevent anyone from using the good, and non-rivalrous means that one person's use of the good does not diminish the ability of others to use it.
Market efficiency	A state where the market allocation of resources is efficient, meaning that no one can be made better off without making someone else worse off. This is often achieved through competition and the profit motive.
Government intervention	A state where the government intervenes in the market to correct market failures or to achieve a social goal. This can be done through a variety of means, including taxes, subsidies, and regulations.
Market equilibrium	A state where the market is in balance, meaning that the quantity demanded equals the quantity supplied. This is often achieved through the price mechanism.
