Darkness In Him:

Nymph of Darkness C. L. Moore, 2011-10-07 Nysa appeared mysteriously with a request of Northwest Smith excerpt The thick Venusian dark of the Ednes waterfront in the hours before dawn is breathless and tense with a nameless awareness a crouching danger The shapes that move murkily thru its blackness are not daylight shapes Sun has never shone upon some of those misshapen figures and what happens in the dark is better left untold Not even the Patrol ventures there after the lights are out and the hours between midnight and dawn are outside the law If dark things happen there the Patrol never knows of them or desires to know Powers move thru the darkness along the waterfront to which even the Patrol bows low Thru that breathless blackness along a street beneath which the breathing waters whispered Northwest Smith strolled slowly No prudent man ventures out after midnight along the waterfront of Ednes unless he has urgent business abroad but from the leisurely gait that carried Smith soundlessly thru the dark he might have been some casual sightseer He was no stranger to the Ednes waterfront He knew the danger thru which he strolled so slowly and under narrowed lids his colorless eyes were like keen steel probes that searched the dark Now and then he passed a shapeless shadow that dodged aside to give him way It might have been no more than a shadow His no colored eyes did not waver He went on alert and wary He was passing between two high warehouses that shut out even the faint reflection of light from the city beyond when he first heard that sound of bare running feet which so surprised him The patter of frantically fleeing steps is not uncommon along the waterfront but these were he listened closer yes certainly the feet of a woman or a young boy Light and quick and desperate His ears were keen enough to be sure of that They were coming nearer swiftly In the blackness even his pale eyes could see nothing and he drew back against the wall one hand dropping to the ray gun that hung low on his thigh He had no desire to meet whatever it was which pursued this fugitive But his brows knit as the footsteps turned into the street that led between the warehouses No woman of whatever class or kind ventures into this quarter by night And he became certain as he listened that those feet were a woman s There was a measured rhythm about them that suggested the Venusian woman s lovely swaying gait He pressed flat against the wall holding his breath He wanted no sound to indicate his own presence to the terror from which the woman fled Ten years before he might have dashed out to her but ten years along the spaceways teaches a man prudence Gallantry can be foolhardy sometimes particularly along the waterfront where any of a score of things might be in close pursuit At the thought of what some of those things might be the hair prickled faintly along his neck
