Francisco Coronado

Spanish explorer de Coronado was born in Spain around the year 1510. He represented the Spanish crown as a conquistador in North America.

When Coronado arrived in New Spain, which is now Mexico in 1540, his fellow explorers and soldiers recognized him for bringing peace to their relationship with the indigenous population. He won Executive Governor of New Spain before being his journey north looking for riches.

A precious metal had reported silver made of gold and Coronado wanted to find them and become rich quickly. Coronado and about three hundred other Spaniards along with enslaved Native Americans set out with horses and weapons to find the cities of gold. They first traveled west to the Gulf of California and then north into what is now the United States.

The exploration group traveled throughout the north American continent in search of gold but found them. They did however discover many indigenous groups who they took back from them through gifts and money. Texas, Oklahoma, and it before returning to Mexico. Once many many horses. Of those lost by Native Americans and other. Once he returned to Mexico in 1542, Coronado reported to the king of findings for the government. Although they had traveled over 7,000 miles.

While Coronado did not find the largest cities of gold, he did leave behind a journal full of his journey through that area.
