THE MELTING POT OR THE SALAD BOWL?

I For many years, the cultural model that was widely accepted in the United States was that the country was a melting pot for immigrants. The melting pot symbolizes the different groups of people who migrated to the United States and brought their own characteristics with them. Once they were in the United States, these people and their cultures were expected to mix and assimilate into a uniform United States culture in which it is impossible to notice the diverse cultures that made it up.

II In recent years, however, the idea of the melting pot is being replaced by a new one. Many new immigrants to the United States do not feel they should be required to change. They believe that they can contribute and belong to the United States, and be its citizens while still keeping some of the culture, beliefs and even the language that they brought with them. Therefore, the new model that is being suggested for the United States is the salad bowl. The salad bowl describes a multicultural society where people do not have to conform to make a new unity, but keep their original character while living side by side with each other.

III It is not certain whether either of these two models is correct for the modern United States. The melting pot seems to be over-idealistic and outdated. Also, older Americans may be suspicious of newer arrivals and do not welcome them, whereas newer Americans may feel that it is impossible to give up their past and their cultural characteristics. The salad bowl is not a perfect model, either. New immigrants who have not learned English or accepted the culture and beliefs common in the United States have difficulty in being a part of the American society. As a result, they are often accused of being unwilling to change, in other words, of not being American enough.

76. Which of the following is WRONG about the "melting pot" model?

- a. It requires immigrants to change their culture and beliefs.
- b. It used to be the dominant cultural model for a long time.
- c. It is an up-to-date and realistic model for the United States.
- d. Its main purpose is to create a uniform national culture.
