

Top 5 Benefits of Outsourcing Registry Abstraction

In the past, hospitals might typically assign responsibility for registry abstraction to their nurses or quality managers, usually on a part-time basis. Today, however, attaining and maintaining a high level of proficiency in registry abstraction demands a full-time commitment. Each registry has unique credentialing requirements, and registrars often must pass annual tests to maintain their certification. They also need continuing education to stay current with best practices.

To address the growing demand for qualified registrars, more and more hospitals are turning to outsourcing services for registry abstraction such as those from Q-Centrix, the largest and fastest growing abstraction services company in the U.S.

The top five benefits of outsourcing abstraction include:

- Enable hospital nurses and quality managers to be more useful on the floor caring for patients or monitoring quality practices
- Increase clinical confidence in data accuracy derived from a third-party, neutral abstracting organization
- Reduce registry data variability and improves quality, which increases practitioner and staff productivity and leads to more effective changes in protocol and policies
- Eliminate staff multi-tasking, which undermines efficiency and can result in a 40% drop in productivity
- Leverages the expertise and skills of experienced medical registrars at the top of their game — Q-Centrix professionals have completed more than 5 million quality abstractions
