

Rare and Unreleased Studies

Hidden in a cupboard at The Tudor House are all sorts of fascinating things... a selection of studies that have been the unexplained force and shape of the dragon... built up by the studio through a series of small, often unexplained, changes over the years of the house.

THE DRAGON OF THE MOUNTAINS

The Dragon of the Mountains, designed by Lewis Pugh and inspired by a book called, 'The Dragon of the Mountains', is a small model, with a dragon on the back, which is the complete model for the house. It measures 1' x 1' x 1' and has the same shape. The Dragon of the Mountains is a small model, with a dragon on the back, which is the complete model for the house. DRAGON OF THE CLOUDS PROTOTYPE ▼

The difference between a prototype and the released study are sometimes small, but with the Dragon of the Clouds the changes are clear for all to see. The prototype is taller and has shorter wings, with the dragon supported only by its tail on a cluster of clouds. In the released version, the dragon is sitting on the clouds, its feet are firmly attached to the base and the larger wings curve (half-way) in a 180 degree arc. The reasons for the changes are apparent, and the prototype looks unlikely to have survived the 'ship test', or even the rigors of delivery from The Tudor House to stores worldwide.

PAINTED STUDIES

Between 1988 and 1990 the studio used painted hand-painted versions of some of the dragon studies. These are not painted particularly quickly with reference to the general shape of the dragon, but they were not in keeping with the rest of the collection... and they were placed out in the open.

Consequently these have not developed a very high and currently have £1000-£1500 on the secondary market. Featured here is the 'Dragon of the Mountains' as painted in 1988.

UNRELEASED PAINTED STUDIES

Painted versions of two dragon studies, the 'Dragon of the Mountains' and the 'Dragon of the Clouds', were painted in 1988. The 'Dragon of the Mountains' was painted in a dark color, and the 'Dragon of the Clouds' was painted in a light color.
