Division of Forestry, 1953 Fire Management Notes , 1997 Northeast Forest Fire Supervisors Northeastern Forest Fire Protection Compact, 2017-06-19 Controlling wildfires has been a significant mission for the state and federal governments since the early 1900s During this time the agencies responsible for wildland fire management have worked jointly in many ways to minimize losses from fires and to constantly improve firefighting and fire management techniques In 1967 a new organization was established among the 20 states within the northeastern area of the United States to unite the forest fire control supervisors from each of those states Since then the Northeast Forest Fire Supervisors have been charged with the responsibility to stimulate and promote the development and use of specialized forest fire equipment including better techniques in fire prevention presuppression suppression and improved training and safety methods Community Equipment and Organization for Fighting Forest, Grass and Brush Fires National Fire Protection Association, 1956 Brush Fire Protection for Homeowners , 1994 Forest Fire Prevention and Control United States. Congress. House. Committee on Agriculture, 1966 Fire Protection Service , 1929 Forest Fire/Wildfire Protection , 2009 Congress continues to face questions about forestry practices funding levels and the federal role in wildland fire protection Several recent fire seasons have been by most standards among the worst in the past half century National attention began to focus on wildfires when a prescribed burn in May 2000 escaped control and burned 239 homes in Los Alamos NM President Clinton responded by requesting a doubling of wildfire management funds and Congress enacted much of this proposal in the FY2001 Interior Appropriations Act P L 106 291 President Bush responded to the severe 2002 fires by proposing a Healthy Forests Initiative to reduce fuel loads by expediting review processes Many factors contribute to the threat of wildfire damages Two major factors are the decline in forest and rangeland health and the expansion of residential areas into wildlands the urban wildland interface Over the past century

aggressive wildfire suppression as well as past grazing and logging practices have altered many ecosystems especially those where light surface fires were frequent Many areas now have unnaturally high fuel loads e g dead trees and dense thickets and an historically unnatural mix of plant species e g exotic invaders Fuel treatments have been proposed to reduce the wildfire threats Prescribed burning setting fires under specified conditions can reduce the fine fuels that spread wildfires but can escape and become catastrophic wildfires especially if fuel ladders small trees and dense undergrowth and wind spread the fire into the forest canopy Commercial timber harvesting is often proposed and can reduce heavy fuels and fuel ladders but exacerbates the threat unless and until the slash tree tops and limbs is properly disposed of Other mechanical treatments e g precommercial thinning pruning can reduce fuel ladders but also temporarily increase fuels on the ground Treatments can often be more effective if combined e g prescribed burning after thinning However some fuel treatments are very expensive and the benefit of treatments for reducing wildfire threats depend on many factors It should also be recognized that as long as there is biomass drought and high winds catastrophic wildfires will occur Only about 1% of wildfires become conflagrations but which fires will blow up into catastrophic wildfires is unpredictable It seems likely that management practices and policies including fuel treatments affect the likelihood of such events However past experience with wildfires are of limited value for building predictive models and research on fire behavior under various circumstances is difficult at best Thus predictive tools for fire protection and control are often based on expert opinion and anecdotes rather than on research evidence Individuals who choose to build homes in the urban wildland interface face some risk of loss from wildfires but can take steps to protect their homes Federal state and local governments can and do assist by protecting their own lands by providing financial and technical assistance and by providing relief after the fire This is a background report and will be updated occasionally
