Contract Management- Post Award:

5.1 Performance security:

Performance security includes performance bonds provided by a bank or Insurance Company, retention funds and performance guarantee by a surety. In construction industry, a performance bond is used to provide security in various situations. Commonly, these performance points are used to provide security in respect to contractor's performance during contract period. Thus a performance Bond protects the client from the risk of a contractor failing to fulfil its contractual obligation to the client. Guarantee to the contractor that the project will be satisfactorily completed.

There are two main types of performance Bonds.

1) On demand: This means that the bond, are the amount payable under the performance bond is payable to the client requesting such payment. There is no requirement to show that the contractor is in Breach of its obligation.

2) Conditional: This means that the bond is payable only after the occurrence of a prescribed event. Usually, this is triggered by a default committed by the contractor such as a delay by the contractor to complete the work by the stipulated period or a failure to rectify the defects after the completion of works.

The client is better protected if the performance Bond lasts until the end of the defects liability period when the final certificate is issued. Performance bonds may be represent around 5 to 10% of the contract value.

5.2 Mobilization and equipment advances:

Mobilisation advance payment are payments of funds to supplier or contractor before Anticipation of, and for the purpose of performance under the contract. The basic purpose is to extend financial assistance within the terms to the contractor to mobilize the man and material
