1. Abstract

Juvenile gigantomastia or virgin mammary hypertrophy is a pathological increase greater than 500 cm³ in the volume of the two breasts in adolescents. It is unlikely, but very often, it is the pain, the disorders of the spinal column and the shoulder girdle, as well as the psychological impact which lead the adolescent to make a request for repairing and cosmetic surgery. The medical treatments are disappointing, giving way to surgery which can compromise the functional future of the mammary glands. We report the case of a young girl carrying a juvenile gigantomastia. It was a 16-year-old girl carrying a disabling gigantomastia whose management, essentially surgical by a reduction mammoplasty was carried out at the Mohamed IV center for the treatment of cancers at CHU CASABLANCA. It is a rare disease. Pregnancies are possible and recurrent are not uncommon.

2. Introduction

Gigantomastia is a rare disease, which remains poorly understood. There is no universally accepted definition, but breast weight greater than 3% of total body weight has been proposed [1].

Juvenile gigantomastia, or virgin mammary hypertrophy, is a subtype that involves the sudden onset, excessive growth of breast tissue during puberty which can occur before or after the onset of menstruation [1] resulting in an excessive increase in breast tissue, breast volume becoming ugly and disabling [2].

It is a rare disease and only isolated cases or very small series have been described [2]. We report a case of gigantomastia in a non-pregnant adolescent followed and operated on at the Muhammed IV center for the treatment of cancers at CHU CASABLANCA.

3. Patient and Observation

This is a 16-year-old patient, nulliparous, with no particular history who had menarche 18 months ago. She presented an extensive and rapid increase in the volume of the breasts involving for 8 months, without inflammatory signs or nipple discharge (Figure 1a and 1b) with on examination of the breasts a 5-cm nodule at the level of the Q51 of the right breast (Figure 2). The weight of the breasts had become too heavy with mechanical back pain. A bilateral mammary ultrasound showed hypertrophy of the two mammary glands with the presence at the level of the right Q51 of a well-limited homogeneous isoechoic tissue formation measuring 11x20mm, vascularized by color doppler evoking a phyllodes tumor classified IBERADS IV confirmed by the breast biopsy which revealed a histological appearance in favor of a benign phyllodes tumor, grade I without signs of malignancy. She underwent bilateral breast reduction with an inverted T technique with a superior pedicle respecting the areola-nipple zone (Figure 3). An amount of glandular tissue estimated at 2339 grams on the right and 2246 grams on the left was removed (Figure 4a). A resection of the right breast nodule was performed (Figure 4b). The anatomopathological examination of the operative specimens was in favor of a fibrocystic breast dysplasia without signs of malignancy and that of the Q51 nodule was in favor of an adenofibroma. Postoperative complications were limited up to anemia which is corrected by a transfusion of blood (urgent) isoheous. The postoperative result was good (Figure 5).
