

Table 1. Conceptual Framework for Child Advocacy.

Definition:
Child advocacy: Any action intended to empower or elevate the status of children by promoting their self-expression and participation, while recognizing that the improved status of children depends on the welfare of the families and communities in which they are embedded.
Assumptions:
1. Disciplinary perspective: Attending to the needs of children requires an interdisciplinary perspective.
2. Protection and autonomy: Children's need for protection from maltreatment, neglect, abuse, and exploitation should be balanced against their intrinsic rights to personhood so they can participate in decisions affecting them.
3. Values and objective analysis: Values influence child advocacy, as passion and ideology often drive action. However, values alone cannot guide policy and practice decisions. Values should be balanced with rigorous analysis of empirical evidence and other sources of reliable information.
Action steps:
1. Synthesize knowledge: Knowledge from relevant disciplines on children's capacity for decision making should be integrated to guide policy and practice for when and how to include children in decision making (Assumption 1).
2. Encourage children's right to participation and self-expression: Article 12 of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child recommends endowing children with certain intrinsic rights, perhaps most importantly, the right to self-expression and their direct participation in matters that affect them (Assumption 2).
3. Identify and define core constructs: Important concepts, such as empowerment, dignity, inclusion, and participation, must be methodically articulated in measurable terms (Assumptions 2 and 3).
4. Evaluate participation and inclusion: Develop best practices for involving and encouraging children's participation and evaluate the circumstances under which children feel included (Assumptions 2 and 3).
5. Connect advocacy goals to participation and inclusion: Conduct research to evaluate the link between subjective and objective indicators of children's inclusion and participation to measurable achievement of specific advocacy goals (Assumption 3).
6. Educate child advocates: Concepts, methodologies, and scholarship from numerous disciplines, including child development, social work, psychology, public policy, and law, are applied to achieve an interdisciplinary understanding of children in the context of multiple child-serving systems and environmental settings (e.g., society, community, family; Assumptions 1-3).
