

Rational Choice Theory

Choosing crime

Offending is explained at the level of the individual and the choices they make: the objective, is to explain how and why some people make decisions that ultimately lead to crime.

Benefits and Costs

When a criminal opportunity is presented the potential offender acts on the basis of a rational assessment of the likely benefits (or rewards) and costs of offending.

If an individual believes the benefits outweigh the costs then a crime is likely to be committed; if the reverse, the opportunity will be rejected.

Offenders not qualitatively different

There's nothing in the sociological or psychological background of offenders that causes or explains their offending. People make choices about their behaviour in the context of particular situations - particularly the opportunities that are available for the commission of crimes.

Opportunities

The extent to which opportunities for crime exist. Different criminal choices arise within different environments and the opportunities they present - or do not present - for criminal behaviour.
