

COPING DURING

AND AFTER A DIVORCE

These tips can help you get through legal, financial and emotional issues during this trying time.

DURING THE DIVORCE

SEEK GOOD LEGAL COUNSEL

You must have a good attorney on your side to help you through a divorce. Ask for recommendations or check an online review site such as Yelp to help you find the attorney who will be best for you.

BE HONEST WITH YOUR ATTORNEY

You need to tell your attorney everything to help ensure that the divorce process goes as smoothly as possible. Withholding information that your attorney needs because it's embarrassing or doesn't paint you in a good light could lead to the divorce not going your way.

BE PREPARED FOR STRESS

Divorce can be a long, painful process, even if you and your spouse are ending your marriage amicably. Make sure you're prepared to deal with the stress by taking time for self-care — including keeping up with an exercise routine, making time to relax and maintaining a healthy diet.

CREATE YOUR OWN SUPPORT NETWORK

Having a support network of friends and family is extremely important for helping you through a divorce. However, be aware that any mutual friends you have with your spouse may take sides or choose to maintain a friendship with both of you. Depending on the circumstances, either situation could make things awkward for you and cause unnecessary stress, so choose your support network carefully.

PAY ATTENTION TO THE KIDS

If you have children, a divorce can be especially stressful on them. Be sure you take the time to give them attention during the divorce, including honestly answering their questions. Kids may believe they did something to lead to the divorce, so be sure to allay any fears they express.

AFTER THE DIVORCE

BE READY FOR CHANGE

A divorce will change practically everything about your life, so you must prepare for that first and foremost. It's about more than your spouse no longer living with you — your entire life will be different going forward, just as getting married changed your life.

DON'T ALLOW OTHERS TO HURT YOU

Whether they're mutual friends or former in-laws, there might be people still in your life after the divorce who may become negative presences. Don't let them become toxic influences, and don't be afraid to cut those people out of your life if they're making things difficult or painful.

TAKE YOUR TIME

Adjusting to life after divorce is a gradual process, one that's different for every individual. There's no set timetable for when you should feel ready to get back into a relationship again, so don't allow yourself to feel anxious about dating if you don't feel entirely ready. It's also important to remind yourself that you may be uncomfortable in your home or with friends and family for a while, and that this is normal.

STICK TO A ROUTINE

A daily routine can be a powerful tool for helping you adjust to your life post-divorce. When uncertainty and unfamiliar situations create anxiety, any kind of predictability — even if it's just your morning coffee run — can help center you and give you something positive to anticipate.

DON'T SUPPRESS YOUR FEELINGS

As you adjust to life after your divorce, it's imperative to remember that your emotions are real and you should acknowledge them. You may want to act as if your divorce was a clean break that you're totally over, but the truth likely is more complicated than that. It's normal to go from dependent to hopeful to angry all in the course of one day. However, with time, you'll gain perspective and even out again, as long as you recognize your feelings and don't try to ignore them.
