Corporate governance was proxied by the level of auditors' commitment towards implementing International Standards on Auditing and Quality Control Standards. Data were collected by using a questionnaire that was distributed on 125 respondents, but only 102 were returned. The statistical analysis shows a significant negative impact for the International Standards on Auditing and Quality Control Standards on credibility gap. Results also show that there are differences in responses refer to gender, education, and experience.

Keywords: Corporate Governance, International Standards on Auditing, and Quality Control Standards, Credibility Gap, Amman Stock Exchange.

I. Introduction

Business environment has been subject to many financial crises followed by loud votes that require auditors to provide users with true and fair financial statements for business enterprises. These votes have raised doubt about the services provided by auditors and the moral and behavioral deficiencies and weaknesses in the profession in general. In addition, they discovered the absence of tight mechanisms in the professional standards and lack of professional quality in performance (Rodrigues, 2011).

Kangarlui and Bayazidi (2011) explored that auditors are responsible for the credibility of financial reports' information. The audit profession is not intended for satisfying the company's management and board of directors, but to reassure external users such as current and prospective investors, financial analysts, and governmental authorities about the truth and fairness of financial report. Hence, the audit profession has a huge responsibility and in order to ensure its work, International Standards on Auditing (ISA) had defined a practical framework for auditor's performance.

Credibility gap is known as a disparity between claims or statements made and the evident fact of the situation or circumstances to which they relate, and for a business to go on such a gap should be narrowed and eliminated if possible (Hamdallah, 2012). From Keeffe (1975) point of view, the inability of auditor to perform his job correctly without making mistakes in judging the veracity of the financial statements is due to a larger gap in the information credibility (Responsibility Gap).

This study aims at identifying the governance role of an auditor and its impact on the credibility gap of financial information from the perspective of investors in ASE. This could be achieved through testing the impact of auditor's compliance with International Standards on Auditing and Quality Control Standards as proxies for corporate governance.
