ABSTRACT: The differences between traditional vs. electronic bibliography are described. There are four elements in the Croatian Scientific Bibliography (CROSBI) creation process: the bibliography itself; the Croatian Ministry of Science and Technology (MST), scientists and their institutional libraries. The main features of the web interface and functions are presented. Advantages and disadvantages of such a specific approach are discussed. Some results of four years experience, as a distribution of the bibliographic records according to document type, institution and scientific project, are presented.

"What the bibliographer is concerned with is pieces of paper or parchment with certain written or printed signs. With these signs he [/she] is concerned merely as arbitrary marks; their meaning is no business of his [/hers]."
Sir Walter Wilson Greg (1911)

BACKGROUND

Although Croatia is a very young country (since 1991) the first Croatian bibliography is very old and comprehensive: Bibliographia Croatica (cro. Bibliografija hrvatska) published 1860 and 1863 (all publications from 15th century to 1863), the situation in the early nineties was not promising. As in many countries also in Croatia National and University Library is being publishing the Croatian National Bibliography in traditional paper format, but this bibliography is covering only the papers published in Croatia. Scientific communication is not limited inside country borders and Croatian scientists are publishing a lot in international journals, especially in the field of sciences and biomedicine. Paper-based bibliography covering only a small percentage of scientific publications is not a reliable and accessible source of information. For that reason many academic and research institutions started to build their local or thematic bibliographies. Data about Croatian research papers has been scattered across different commercial databases also.

A comprehensive, current, accurate and accessible bibliography is even more important in small countries like Croatia, with only eight thousand scientists. Scientific research in Croatia is financed by the Ministry of Science and Technology (MST) through research projects. The most important criteria for project evaluation and subsequent funding is the
