

Pathophysiology

In Healthy joints of two bones. Articular cartilage which is type of connective tissue lining two bones that lining each other essentially with friction with osteoarthritis. One particular joint, synovial joint along with articular cartilage another important component of synovial joints is Synovium, along with the surface of articular cartilage forms inner lining of joint space. In Synovium composed of connective tissues and blood vessels, lymphatic vessels on the surface type A cells that produced clear debris and type B cells that produced components of synovial fluid. Which are lubricant to articular cartilage surface. [20, 11]

The main issues in osteoarthritis is progressive loss of articular significant friction between them, which can generate inflammation and trigger pain to the nerve end in the joint space.

Maintaining articular cartilage is chondrocytes specialized cell process maintain cartilage. Chondrocytes produce a extra cellular matrix type-2 collagen structural support as well as proteoglycans is a protein and sugar molecular like hyaluronic acid and chondroitin Sulfate and keratin sulfate. All these extra cell can keep the cartilage elasticity.

The Chondrocytes with in the cartilage matrix also exhibit age related changes, it has been proposed that reactive oxygen species (free radicals) induced by stressors like mechanical or biological may lead to cell senescence.

The cell senescence is accompanied for unregulation of inflammation cytokine expression such as interleukin-1 (IL-1), tumor necrosis factor alpha (TNF α) are drivers.

The cytokines also stimulate directly by production of other factors like pro-inflammatory including leukotriene inhibiting factors like: IL-VIII, IL-VI protease and prostaglandin E2 (PGE2). The net catabolic environment and loss of extra-cellular matrix is formed due to IL-1 and TNF α both cytokines increase MMP synthesis and decrease the inhibitors of MMP enzymes. Nitric oxide (NO) is a free radical and Nitric oxide synthesis are synthesized by chondrocytes. Proteoglycan synthesis and IGF-1 is inhibited by Nitric oxide on chondrocytes.

Articular cartilage damage, chondrocytes starts trying to pair the cartilage. Initial starts making loss of proteoglycans and more type 3 collagen and making different collagen type, type 1 collagens++. It does not interact with proteoglycans. In the same way decrease elasticity in cartilage and along with breakdown.

The apoptosis in chondrocytes and forms apoptotic bodies. Apoptotic bodies express catabolic properties. These may contribute to the observed abnormal Chondral calcification and osteophyte formation. Osteophyte or bone "spurs" form in an attempt to stabilize the joint and ultimately fuse it together. Bone spurs can injure nerve, blood vessels and connective tissues that is seen in osteoarthritis.
