New Frontiers in Offender Treatment Elizabeth L. Jeglic, Cynthia Calkins, 2018-11-16 This book reviews how new and promising evidence based interventions are being used with those involved in the criminal justice system While there has been an increased emphasis on evidence based practice within forensic treatment there remains a disjoint between what we know works and adapting these interventions to those involved in the criminal justice system This book seeks to bridge that gap by providing an overview of what we know works and how that information has been translated into offender treatment In addition it highlights avenues where additional research is needed This book is comprised of three parts In the first part current models of correctional treatment including the Risk Needs Responsivity Model The Good Lives Model and Cognitive Behavioral Models are presented In the second part the chapters address clinical issues such as the therapeutic alliance clinician factors and diversity related issues that impact treatment outcome In the third and final part of the book adaptations of innovative and cutting edge evidence based treatments such as Dialectical Behavior Therapy Trauma Informed Care Mindfulness Motivational Interviewing Assertive Community Treatment Multisystemic Treatment New frontiers in Intimate Partner Violence treatment and the current research on the treatment of those with psychopathy are presented Research supporting these treatment approaches targeting areas such as self management psychological well being treatment engagement and retention and their relationship to recidivism will be reviewed while their adaptation for use with forensic populations is discussed The book concludes with the editors summary of the findings and a discussion of the future of evidence based interventions within the field of forensic psychology

Basic and applied research on deception and its detection Wolfgang Ambach, Matthias Gamer, 2014-08-07 Deception is a ubiquitous phenomenon in social interactions and has attracted a significant amount of research during the last decades The majority of studies in this field focused on how deception modulates behavioral autonomic and brain responses and whether these changes can be used to validly identify lies Especially the latter question which historically gave rise to the development of psychophysiological lie detection techniques has been driving research on deception and its detection until today The detection of deception and concealed information in forensic examinations currently constitutes one of the most frequent applications of psychophysiological methods in the field With the increasing use of such methods the techniques for detecting deception have been controversially discussed in the scientific community It has been proposed to shift from the original idea of detecting deception per se to a more indirect approach that allows for determining whether a suspect has specific knowledge of crime related details This so called Concealed Information Test is strongly linked to basic psychological concepts concerning memory attention orienting and response monitoring Although research in this field has intensified with the advancement of neuroimaging techniques such as PET and fMRI in the last decade basic questions on the psychological mechanisms underlying modulatory effects of deception and information concealment on behavioral autonomic and brain responses are still poorly understood This Research Topic brings together contributions from researchers in experimental psychology psychophysiology and neuroscience focusing on the understanding of the broad concept of deception including the detection of concealed information with respect to basic research questions as well as applied issues This Research Topic is mainly composed of original research articles but reviews and papers elaborating on novel methodological approaches have also been included Experimental methods include but are not limited to behavioral autonomic electroencephalographic or brain imaging techniques that allow for revealing relevant facets of deception on a multimodal level While this Research Topic primarily includes laboratory work relevant issues for the field use of such methods are also discussed
